Introduction

Are you ready to start a business? How much do you know about the process? Well, what you do not know can hurt you. Starting a business is a major challenge and should not be undertaken without considerable thought and planning. There are several issues to consider. This handbook was developed by the Grand Strand Chapter of SCORE as a reference guide for entrepreneurs who are seriously considering starting their own business. We challenge you to answer several probing questions that will help you assess your readiness to start a business, and if you are, will give you a sense of direction and help assure your success. On each major topic, we've included links to additional information.

The Challenge

Starting a business is hard, success is elusive, but if all the fundamental processes are used, the success rate increases. What Is the Small Business Failure Rate? 20% of small businesses fail in their first year, 30% of small businesses fail in their second year, and 50% of small businesses fail after five years in business. Finally, 70% of small business owners fail in their 10th year in business. In South Carolina, this percentage was 80.82%. This indicator is a measure of immediate survival; it does not reflect long-term survival

Surveys of business failure attribute the following explanations for a lack of success.

- 78% lack a well-developed business plan, including insufficient research
- 73% are overly optimistic about achievable sales, the money required and about what needs to be done to be successful
- 70% do not recognize or ignore what they do not do well and do not seek help from those who do
- 63% have insufficient relevant and applicable experience

To sum up, the critical factors you must take under serious consideration to ensure the success of your business and avoid failure are:

- Adequate capital or resources
- Management experience and ability
- Education/experience in the field
- Good work ethic and time management skills
- Ability to ask input of others and make appropriate changes
- Willingness to test your idea
- Develop a business plan

Do you have the right stuff?

When deciding whether, or not to start a business the first key question to ask yourself is do you have the personality and skills required to start a business? Ask yourself these questions. It is a good idea to write down your response and explain your answer. So, are you:

- A self-starter and resourceful?
- Have a positive attitude toward people?
- Responsible?
- Organized?
- Persistent?
- Trustworthy?
- Decisive?

In addition to the traits you need, successful entrepreneurs must be clearly focused in order to reach their goals, possess the competence or skill needed to produce the products or services for their target customers; and, finally, have the passion or interest in starting and managing the business.

What you need to

- Focus – Being able to maintain interest and focus your time and energy on the important few essential tasks while avoiding the unimportant many. You simply cannot respond to every request or idea. Additionally, you must stick to your plan and execute it.
- Competence – Having the skills, knowledge, or experience in your proposed business is a major key to success. It is also extremely helpful for you to have an awareness of general business practices such as cash management, marketing and people management, etc. Knowledge of startup requirements such as funding sources will be of great help as well.
- Passion – No new endeavor succeeds without passion and drive, that energy that keeps you going when things get tough. So, it is important that you have a love for the business you plan to be in to keep you motivated when you have to work long hours with low to no monetary rewards.

Your Dream – Is it realistic?

Once you have determined that you have what it takes to start a business you will need to test your idea to see if it is reasonable and has the potential for success. To test your idea, you must confirm that the product(s) or service(s) you are planning to offer will attract the kind of customers you are targeting. To “test your concept” you should:

- Try it out – If possible, go to work with a similar company. For instance, if you are thinking of opening a floral shop, go work with a florist for a few months to see what it is really like. Many times, the reality of running a business falls way short of the fantasy.
- Talk to entrepreneurs in the same field – Find someone who is successfully doing what you want to do and interview them. Of course, it must be someone with whom you will not compete. Ask them what it is like, what were/are the challenges, what they like best, and the least about the business, what they wish they had known when they started that they know now. Also, find more than one person to talk with.
- Evaluate whether you enjoy the work and excel at it – Develop an understanding of the primary skills and work required to be successful in your proposed business. Ask yourself if you will be good at that and will enjoy doing it every day for a long time. Often, we plunge into pursuits without understanding exactly what is required for success and find that we are a complete misfit and are thus unhappy and unsuccessful.
- Judge your ability and desire to handle all aspects of the business. This is good to know so that you can plan on how to manage those areas that you are unqualified to handle. You can make plans to hire someone or outsource the work.
- Determine whether the business has a solid chance of turning a profit and exactly when; this will require forecasting of sales and expenses. If you do not have the skills to do this, find someone qualified to help you. Do a best case and a worst-case scenario. This can help you make a go/no-go decision and if you decide to proceed, you will need the forecast for your business plan as well.

- Evaluate the risk this business requires – Identify potential risks and a plan for reducing or eliminating them. Decide if you are prepared to take all the associated risks.

The Market – Who is your target customer and who are your competitors?

A clear understanding of your market is vital to business success. The value of knowing your target customer and your competition cannot be over emphasized. Defining your customer gives you the ability to estimate the size of your potential market and where and how to promote your business. Is your market just Horry County, or will you looking to expand into Georgetown, Florence and Marion as well?

Your business can improve its odds of success if it has a unique niche that gives you an advantage over the competitors. Walmart developed their niche on price. For 99% of small businesses, using price to define your niche is usually not feasible. The following questions can help you develop your niche:

- What is unique about your product or service? Does it have a compelling difference? Domino’s Pizza was built on the compelling difference of “Fresh, hot pizza in 30 minutes or less, guaranteed.” They did not even say it was good. On the difference of fast delivery, it became the largest pizza chain in the world. Find some way to make your product or service unique.
- What are the needs, desires, or values of your customers that your product or service will satisfy? Federal Express succeeded from the need for fast parcel delivery. Its early ad message was "When it absolutely, positively has to be there overnight". What customer needs are you fulfilling?
- What makes you and your business different? Why will customers do business with you rather than someone else? How will you be different from the competition? You have to be able to answer the questions, “Your business, so what? Who cares?”
- If you don’t know your difference, you cannot market it. Just advertising “me too” will not likely cause anyone to buy from you. You must know your niche in order to market, promote and compete effectively.
- If your customers don’t know what distinguishes you, they probably will leave you. If they cannot discern any difference between you and others’ offerings, why will they continue to patronize you? There is no reason to.

Money – How much do you need and where to get it?

Acquiring capital for a start-up can be a major hurdle for entrepreneurs. Preparing a business plan will require that you do financial forecasts so that you can determine your capital needs. Knowing how much you will need to open your business and how much you will need until you have a profit and positive cash flow is where you must start. At

But once you calculate your funding needs, where do you go to get it? Listed are 10 sources of funding.

1. Your Assets - 68% of start-ups are financed with personal assets. This includes savings, retirement accounts, other investments, and liquidating assets such as cars, boats, jewelry, etc.
2. Angel Investors – These are wealthy individuals who will make an initial investment but in return will expect a 10-50% stake in your business.
3. Friends and Family – Make sure you are clear about whether money from this source is a loan (which you will have to pay back) or equity (which is ownership in your business). Be certain that you get a written agreement.
4. Credit Cards – We have all heard of the entrepreneur who started their business with credit cards. Spike Lee financed his first movie with credit cards. It is easy but the interest rates are expensive.
5. Bank Loans – Loans are like mortgages in that they require monthly payments. They also require collateral, which may vary by bank, and a personal guarantee as well as a good business plan.
6. SBA Micro Loan (up to $50,000) – The SBA provides funds to specially designated intermediary lenders, which are nonprofit community-based organizations with experience in lending as well as management and technical assistance.
7. SBA 7(a) loans - SBA 7(a) loans are negotiated between a borrower and an SBA-approved lender and are guaranteed by the SBA. 7(a) loans have a maximum loan amount of $5 million.
8. For those who do not qualify for a standard loan there is the possibility of using social lending and crowdfunding such as:
  - InventureX (Kickstarter)
  - Indiegogo
  - RocketHub
  - AngelList
  - Peerbackers
  - Crowdfunder
  - Kiva

9. Trade credit is securing longer payment terms with suppliers but getting trade credit is hard to establish. Most suppliers won't take a chance on a business with no payment history.
10. Customers who are willing to extend credit to your business –This might take the form of a customer willing to prepay for products or services that will be delivered or used sometime in the future.

There are some grants available, but it depends upon the specific type of business and the ownership such as bio-tech, “green” (recycling) or research.

Business Structure – How you legally organize

Your business structure will depend on several factors such as personal liability and tax consequences. SCORE recommends that you consult with an attorney to determine the best option for you and your business.

The following are business structures available to an entrepreneur:

- Sole Proprietorship – you own it all and personally have all the liabilities. The income is taxed personally.
- General Partnership – a single business where two or more people share ownership and the profits as well as any losses of the business.
- Limited Liability Partnership – for professional partnerships in which some or all partners (depending on the jurisdiction) have limited liabilities. In an LLP, one partner is not responsible or liable for another partner's misconduct or negligence.
- Limited Partnership - formed by two or more people, with at least one person acting as the general partner who has management authority and personal liability, and at least one person in the role of limited partner who is a passive investor with no management authority.
- Corporation - an independent legal entity owned by shareholders. The corporation itself, not the shareholders, is legally liable for the actions and debts the business incurs. More complex than other business structures, corporations are generally suggested for established, larger companies with multiple employees.
- Statutory S Corporation – a closely held corporation that, in general does not pay any federal income taxes. Instead, the corporation's income or losses are divided among and passed through to its shareholders. Shareholders have the same protection from liability as shareholders of a regular corporation.
- Limited Liability Company (LLC) - a hybrid type of legal structure that provides the limited liability features of a corporation and the tax efficiencies and provides operational flexibility of a partnership.

Putting It All Together – Creating a road map: the business plan

Now that you have answered the key questions about starting our business, it is time to put it all together and write a business plan. Having a business plan is essential to a start-up as well as an established business. The time you invest in your business plan will pay off many times. Some of the benefits you can get from creating a business plan are:

- A blueprint of your business to keep you focused and on track
- Targets and timetables to track your performance against goals and make any needed corrections
- A description of your products and services
- A forecast of your sales, costs, and profits
- A description of your target customers and their buying behaviors
- An objective analysis of your market
- An explanation and justification for your marketing strategies
- A list of your main competitors and how you expect to outperform them
- An explanation of your business model or how you plan to make a profit and stay in business
- Anticipation of potential challenges or hurdles you might face and what you will/can do about them
- A summary document that you can use to explain your business to suppliers and lenders as well as key employees.

Key Business Plan Elements

A business plan can take many forms and generally the more complex the business the more detail and explanation required for a complete plan. But whether you are starting a home business or a complicated high tech, manufacturing concern, your plan will include these three key elements.

1. Business Concept/Idea
  - Business Vision
  - Key Success Factors
2. Marketing Plan
  - Target Customer Groups
  - Products/Services Prices/Margins
  - The Value Proposition
  - Advertising Techniques
3. Financial Plan
  - Projected Income Statement
  - Startup Costs
  - Financing Needs

A successful business plan does not depend on the number of pages, the color images, or the number of charts and graphs. For many businesses, a one-page business plan may be all that is required, if it addresses these issues:

- Customer Problem and the Solution
- Business Model - How you make money
- Target Market and Competitive Advantage
- Management Team
- Financial Summary and Funding
